Awareness about our consumption habits lie behind the collection of plastic bottles, disposable plates and fragments of waste picked up from the beach. It invokes a call to attention about big zones of the sea's bottom becoming a human made plastic blanket.

Impacto Mínimo series explores how different actions linked with Colombian natural resources generate environmental changes that range from almost imperceptible effects to the elimination of minimal survival conditions.

The work Hopelessness from this series is the result of a participative action with a small fisherman community from Pozos Colorados in Santa Marta, Colombia. The experience consisted in collecting objects that the sea brings back and reinstalling them in fishermen's quotidian places to change their significance.
